Ron Lewis

The session was chaired by Dr. R.K Mittal. Prof. R.K. Mittal gave the insight on the purpose of conducting this session and elaborated on the current scenario of Higher education in India. Sir believe that there is still a long way to go in attaining excellence in higher education and a number of loopholes still need to be plugged in. There were other eminent speakers with vast knowledge who shared their valuable thoughts with the young faculty members.

Prof. Chandrashekhar, IIT Delhi gave a view point on the faculty development by methods like periodic assessment of faculty, research work contribution, involving digital platform for the knowledge enhancement of students.

Prof. Ashwini Mohapatra stated that Indian students lack the ability to excel due to inadequate guidance and information. It is important to make them aware about the concepts and the value of the subjects, which will help in raising the statistics of higher education in India. The faculty should be nurtured at a level where they can give a platform to students which will help in understanding business practices, methodologies in their respective industry domains.

The key leaning of the lecture was that a good higher education system is essential for national, social and economic development of India. There is a need of value based higher education system which will empower youth for self-sustainability by inculcating employment skills. Today's education system demands an interface with the industries for delivering best talents.
