Part 1

Aim of the event:

The foreign exchange and stock market are one of the most exciting, fast-paced markets in the financial world. Though historically, forex has been the domain of large institutions, central banks, and high wealth individuals, the growth of the Internet has allowed the average individual to become involved with and profit from online currency trading. People are investing their wealth in the stocks with a hope to double their investments. But investing requires a lot of information in hand so that there is less risk involved.

Abstract:

People now-a-days are always keen to invest their money in stocks and double their money in no time. Mr. Anshul Ravinder Bhatia, an alumni of our college, is working as Assistant Team Lead in Finance for Cvent. He started his lecture in a very informal way by giving his own introduction and shared his experience regarding how he grew from a simple management graduate to an assistant team lead.

He explained basics of stock market- its meaning, how does it function, who can invest, what are different types of companies who can invest in the stock market, what are the basic essentials required to invest in the stocks, dos and donts of investing etc.

Sir then distinguished between currency and money which is often used interchangeably but is actually a lot more different than each other. He told the students about various types of currency available in the market and briefed them about the major currencies in the world.

He also explained the process of determining the currency prices. He stated the various factors which impact the currency prices like inflation, interest rates, current account deficits, public debt, political stability and economic performance etc..

Sir then briefed the students about the forex market and distinguished between the forex and stock market. He concluded with the revision of the basic jargon of the market followed by the question and answer session.

Part 3

Conclusion

Investing money in the right stocks is not an easy task, it includes various repercussions if the things go wrong. In order to avoid that risk, it is necessary to obtain proper knowledge about how the stock market works. Such classroom lectures prove to be beneficial for the students as they get the basic knowledge which can be later used.
