Summary

A high-performing team is a team that learns from mistakes, grows, and is able to fix or predict those mistakes quickly. Everyone listens to each other and hear what they say. A team is a living organism that evolves continuously. People who understand the purpose are more motivated and can offer solutions to issues that others will not see.

This session focused on communication in the context of information flow, control & decision-making based on cybernetics (the science of communication and control), introducing participants to this incredibly powerful science to provide them with clear, practical and powerful communication tools. By attending this session, the participants discovered one of the key secrets of the 21st Century leaders; the fundamental relationship between communication & control. Just like finance ensures the smooth running of a team or organization by organizing the flow of money, advanced communication skills organize the flow of information throughout the organization. This session was attended by an interesting group of 25 managers and entrepreneurs. The topics covered were: primary principles of communication and control, how to communicate plans effectively, how to ensure plans get properly implemented, how to improve learning using communication skills, how to improve planning and decision making using communication skills, improving unity and trust using communication skills, Brain jamming and quest for solutions. There was an activity towards the end of the session wherein the participants had to share their agile moments from within the team using a story telling technique.

The eMDP was delivered with the help of rich industry examples and activity session.
